Althaus-Reid, a renowned Argentine theologian, draws on her own experiences as a lesbian woman of color to offer a unique and provocative critique of the patriarchal and heteronormative structures that have dominated Christian theology for centuries.

She argues that these structures have silenced and marginalized the voices of women, queer people, and people of color, and that they have distorted our understanding of God's love and grace.

Althaus-Reid's theology is rooted in the liberation struggles of the poor and oppressed, and she insists that God is on the side of those who are fighting for justice and liberation.

She writes:

“God is not a white male patriarch who sits on a throne in heaven, but a God who is present in the midst of our struggles, who suffers with us, and who calls us to work for a more just and equitable world.”

Althaus-Reid's work has been praised by theologians and activists around the world for its originality, its insights, and its potential to transform our understanding of God and our relationship with the divine.

In Indecent Theology, Althaus-Reid offers a powerful and passionate vision of a God who is both loving and liberating, a God who is on the side of the oppressed, and a God who calls us to live in solidarity with one another.
